

This document outlines the Support Life-Cycle details for specific Accubid products, and the corresponding version. End of Support refers to the last day in which a particular Accubid product and version was, or will be, officially supported by Accubid’s Product Support group. Support means the resolution of issues and the answering of feature/function inquiries for a particular product and version.

While all support officially ends at the End of Support date, Accubid will make reasonable best efforts to assist a client with an active Extended Service Plan on products and versions that have passed the End of Support date (providing the knowledge and technology resources are available to do so).

Any and all bugs discovered in a particular product and version (actively supported or not) would either have been, or will be, addressed in a newer existing or future release. Bug fixes are never made to legacy releases; as such, should a particular bug found in a legacy product have been fixed in a newer release, clients will have to upgrade to the newer release to take advantage of the bug fix.
